Disbelief and Welstchmerz: Tourism Implications

Julio Batle
University of the Balearic Islands, julio.batle@uib.es

Follow this and additional works at: https://digitalcommons.library.tru.ca/cts-proceedings

Part of the Tourism and Travel Commons

Recommended Citation
Available at: https://digitalcommons.library.tru.ca/cts-proceedings/vol2017/iss1/130

This Abstract is brought to you for free and open access by Digital Commons @ TRU Library. It has been accepted for inclusion in Critical Tourism Studies Proceedings by an authorized editor of Digital Commons @ TRU Library. For more information, please contact apaterson@tru.ca.
Title: Disbelief and Weltschmerz: Tourism Implications
Author: Julio Batle
Affiliation: University of the Balearic Islands
Contact: julio.batle@uib.es
Session Type: Presentation

Abstract:

The last decade’s economic crisis is revealing manifold fissures in the economic/social/value/sense-making system, and this inevitably has an effect on people’s psyche, on their beliefs and desires, and even on their perception of needs. Many effects of the present situation are symptoms of a broader type of crisis. The economic crisis may have acted as a catalyst for increasing (social, political, spiritual) awareness, and it could be paradoxically a landmark and a far-reaching impetus to renewal and awakening of humanity, to build a sounder and more sustainable (social, educational, political, economic) system. Disbelief in any type of institution or societal structure is increasingly cited as a central feature of the present time, and some pieces of research aim at measuring it, together with other related conditions such as weltschmerz. Whereas the extent to which the current economic crisis has produced a personal or integral crisis remains to be ascertained, it is clear that concepts such as meaning or transcendence—to combat disbelief, meaninglessness, and weltschmerz—have become relevant in the discussion on qualitative implications in tourism. Tillich’s analysis of existential anxiety and Ausubel’s concept of meaningful learning provide a conceptual framework to identify required elements for a particular, desired outcome (coping with the second domain of existential pain/weltschmerz and other components of disbelief), whose empirical relevance and practical implications, expectations, needs related to transformation, and new values are examined in this piece of research on tourism experience of different sport tourists in the Balearic Islands. The research first aims, in particular, at measuring the subjective perception of increasing disbelief and weltschmerz in a sample of tourists and, secondly, at exploring the consequences of this perception in terms of meaning search through different aspects of the tourism experience.