2019

Neo-tribal Theory and Event Management: Exploring the Role of Event Space in Social Sustainability Outcomes

Oskaras Vorobjovas-Pinta
University of Tasmania, Australia

Anne Hardy
University of Tasmania, Australia

Follow this and additional works at: https://digitalcommons.library.tru.ca/cts-proceedings

Part of the Tourism and Travel Commons

Recommended Citation
Available at: https://digitalcommons.library.tru.ca/cts-proceedings/vol2019/iss1/17

This Abstract is brought to you for free and open access by Digital Commons @ TRU Library. It has been accepted for inclusion in Critical Tourism Studies Proceedings by an authorized editor of Digital Commons @ TRU Library. For more information, please contact apaterson@tru.ca.
Title: Neo-tribal Theory and Event Management: Exploring the Role of Event Space in Social Sustainability Outcomes

Authors:
Oskaras Vorobjovas-Pinta
University of Tasmania, Australia

Anne Hardy
University of Tasmania, Australia

Abstract:
The field of event management has attracted a breadth of research into the triple-bottom line of economic efficiency, environmental integrity and social equity (Andersson & Lundberg, 2013; Getz, 2008). The focus of many such studies has leaned towards the economic and environmental dimensions, neglecting the social domain. Similarly, the application of distributive justice to tourism and events studies has tended to focus on environmental and economic issues, such as access to places and resources and distribution of economic benefits from the consumption of tourism goods and services, whilst justice for marginalised and minority groups has been seemingly overlooked (Tazim & Camargo, 2014). LGBTQI+ communities around the world are known to use gay events, such as pride parades, as media to communicate their identity and to seek support from broader society (Ong & Goh, 2018). Distributive justice and fairness for disadvantaged groups is usually mandated by the state through policy means and/or investment (Blake, 2001), however LGBTQI+ communities could be seen as examples of where marginalised people have established new platforms themselves to engage in a direct dialogue with wider society and the state. This study builds on the concept of distributive justice and examines how the notion of space in neo-tribal theory (Vorobjovas-Pinta, 2018) informs best social practice in event management. The study uses a case of the Broken Heel drag queen festival, held in rural Australian town of Broken Hill, as a context to contribute to the conversation about justice and tourism.